The landscape-oriented design of Adobe Photoshop, combined with its powerful features, makes it a more powerful and far-reaching tool than most similar products. It can take your digital photographs to the next level, make them more than just pretty pictures. However, it is an incredibly complex tool, so if you want to edit your images or create them from scratch, you may be better off exploring free or low-cost alternatives. * * * # Laying images on top of one another: Using layers To work in Photoshop, you need to understand the concept of layers. Layers are like pages of a book or movie frames — each one is an image in a Photoshop file. Any part of the image can be on any layer, and it's simply a matter of moving or cropping the parts you want to work on. Whenever you add a new layer, Photoshop automatically creates a new blank or empty layer beneath it. Each layer can have its own adjustments, fill, and effects, so that whatever's on top of it is not obscured. You can also manipulate the layers, but any changes you make will always be on the layer below. Here's how to add a new layer using the default settings: 1. Choose Photoshop⇒Preferences⇒Layers, or use the Layer button at the bottom of the Layers panel. The Layers dialog box appears. 2. If the Layers panel is not open, click the Layer button at the bottom of the Layers panel to open it. 3. Choose New Layer from the Layer Type drop-down list. 4. Click Create Layer. Photoshop creates a new layer and places it beneath any layer that you have selected. The new layer name is automatically added to the list. You may be interested to know that you can switch between different layers in a file by selecting Layers⇒Layers and then using the Layer With and Replace With buttons. Photoshop adds layer style options in the Layers panel to determine how the new layer will look when you apply the Paint Bucket or Eraser tools to it. The Layer Styles options found in the Layers panel let you change the type of layer and to apply different effects, such as curves, reflections, and shadows. In many cases, layer styles can perform the same actions as paint or erase, making them a useful feature. Layers can be used

Any ads you see in the community are self-serve and for that matter, so is every purchase in our store. I buy my own items in order to support my business and like I said in the intro - I'm a talented man and am very fortunate to have a job that allows me to express myself and my love of music. So far, I haven't received a single hate mail, and most people in the community are pretty supportive. This is obviously an unpopular position to take, especially considering that the industry, and many other industries, constantly bemoan the lack of quality musicians. However, we are creators - we, on some level, have to be willing to take a risk to be original, even if it means being criticized for the choices we make. I think any musician that thinks they can't make mistakes and still be deemed to be a good musician is delusional. I also don't understand why anyone thinks having the right to say what you feel gives you the right to respond, or attempt to further discuss it. Maybe you think I attacked you, but I haven't. Yet, I'm told that I did. That's fine, I'll correct it if I'm wrong and clarify so we are both on the same page. I'm also told I'm an asshole for the way I posted it. I don't want to give off the impression that I'm trying to justify something I'm not, so I'll use my own words. First of all, we all deal with social pressure to conform or with the desire to be liked, whether it's your wife, your friends, or your employer. If you are not used to it, you might not be aware of it. I don't think I'm an asshole, you probably are judging me on that. I spent a lot of years being a junkie and dealing with substance abuse and rehab, which was directly related to my behavior issues. For the last 10 years or so, I've spent a significant amount of time in counseling, dealing with flashbacks and triggers to specific events, and developing coping skills to deal with it. Since dealing with this stuff, I'm much more confident in my ability to deal with the aspects of my life that I don't control, and I have a much clearer idea of where my thought process comes from. I'm confident my limitations are just that and I'm very conscious of my mistakes. I don't have all the answers yet, but I'm much more confident in

Is there something I've forgotten to do? A: You can't import a module once it has already been imported. Try to move the imports in a function, and call that function from your scripts.
