Intellisense support automatic... What's New Version 2.6 - In addition to French and Italian, VBA Encryption Password has been added to support Persian and Arabic languages. Version 2.5 - Document Viewer support will be added to the Add-In in the future. In 1613, Johann Heermann settled in Sweden as a Lutheran missionary. At the time, Sweden was a very sparsely populated, largely Viking-controlled territory. To spread the Word of God in the surrounding territory, Heermann went in the direction of many of the nearby German Lutherans and married a Swedish woman. This is where the Jewish roots of the King and his family and many other Swedish nobles begin to surface. During the age of the Turks (which was also the age of the Swedes), it was normal for Ottoman travelers to visit European courts. For example, the philosopher and Turkish Muslim thinker Al-Farabi traveled to Christian Europe during the century before Columbus and wrote an account of his trip. It is possible that Heermann had some contact with the Jewish community in Strasbourg during his time at the court of King Gustav II Adolf and Queen Kristina (who is believed to have been Jewish). The Swedish Royal House The story of King Sigismund is not a good omen for much future debate about Jewish ancestry. Unlike his family, Sigismund did not marry a Jewish convert, but a royal Swedish princess who later married the German prince Charles V, the Holy Roman Emperor and King of Spain. Sigismund converted to Lutheranism after his wife's death in 1545. When he was declared absolute ruler, he expelled all the Jews from the country. As the heir to the Swedish throne, Sigismund encouraged the members of his family to take Lutheran religious studies and encouraged them to write their names, images, and symbols in Swedish. Also according to Swedish historian and author Gustaf Thulin, the King and Queen Swedish Ethno-religious program, according to Thulin, made a point of drawing a connection between the King and the Bible. King Charles represented Christ, King Sigismund was God's son, and later, King Gustav III was called the "Lion of the North". During the 17th century, Sweden was a significant trading partner with Holland, England, the Netherlands, England, and Rome.
