[Predictive variables in the epidemiological profile of the sick-listed in a western city in Brazil]. Given the difficulties of access to health care in Brazil, absenteeism in work has become an important public problem, having to be solved by the health and social security systems. The aims of this study were to show the relation between absenteeism and the epidemiological characteristics of sick-listed workers and to establish which of these characteristics could be used to predict the worker's absenteeism. The study took place in a city with 100,000 inhabitants located in São Paulo state in Brazil. A cross-sectional study was conducted using a questionnaire to obtain information about absenteeism and to analyse its relationship with epidemiological variables. A sample of 292 individuals (women: 67.8%; men: 32.2%) was analysed. The highest frequency of absenteeism was recorded in the 15 to 24 age group (39.4%). The following variables were related to absenteeism in the crude analysis: age, occupational class, chronic diseases, smoking and alcohol consumption. Age (OR = 1.26; 95% CI: 1.13-1.40), lower education (OR = 2.82; 95% CI: 1.23-6.55) and chronic diseases (OR = 3.42; 95% CI: 1.29-9.18) were the variables related to absenteeism in the adjusted analysis. These variables can be used to predict absenteeism in the studied sample.

Chromium films are used in the production of metal parts such as castings, forgings, and the like.

The films are used as protective and decorative layers on metals and metal alloys. The electrodeposition of chromium films may be performed from aqueous solutions of hexavalent or trivalent chromium. The electrodeposition process typically involves the cathodic reduction of a metal salt in the solution and anodic deposition of a chromium oxide onto the metal cathode in an acid electrolyte. Electrodeposition of chromium-nickel-phosphorous alloy films is also known in the art. Typically, the alloy film is deposited using a solution having a relatively low concentration of
