A high-definition flat panel display device, for example, a liquid crystal display device, a plasma display device, an organic electroluminescent display device, an electrophoretic display device, and the like, has an organic insulating film, for example, a thin-film transistor, formed over an active matrix substrate. As a constituent material of such an organic insulating film, polyimide is known. For example, Patent Documents 1 and 2 disclose a polyimide precursor composition containing an aliphatic diamine that is substituted by two fluorine atoms. The polyimide precursor composition contains a compound (A) that exhibits a high solubility and a low decomposition temperature and a compound (B) that exhibits a low solubility and a high decomposition temperature, together with a solvent, for example, N-methyl-2-pyrrolidone (NMP). In Patent Document 1, polyimide is formed by thermally decomposing the polyimide precursor composition at about 350 to 400° C. In Patent Document 2, a polyimide precursor is prepared by mixing a polyamic acid, which is obtained by reacting the compound (A) with pyromellitic anhydride (PMA), and the compound (B), and then is imidized by heating at about 350 to 400° C.It's Midnight in Carcosa, and you've just found something odd on the floor of a New York gazebo. A three-legged chair. Two tiny poodles sitting on its arms. Well, don't panic, it's just a three-legged chair. It's not a supernatural manifestation. There's no curse. It's just an attempt by the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (SPCA) to stop would-be pet thieves by luring them with a fake chair with no legs. New York State's law against pet stealing is notoriously difficult to prosecute, but since the inception of the SPCA's chair prank in 1986, an increasing number of pet-thefts have been successfully foiled. Many pet-owners know they're missing a leg, but choose not to report it to the police or animal welfare groups, viewing them as a group who don't understand the emotional attachment they have with their pets. While the legman hoax, as it's become known as, certainly has helped to build trust with the "pawnbrokers" who handle

House Bill 1697, passed by the state's House of Delegates in June, will have an impact on the marijuana industry in the state. Until now, there was no state law banning smoking marijuana in public places, which is a problem. The state of Maryland has a state law that prohibits smoking tobacco or marijuana in enclosed public places. But until now, there has never been a law against smoking marijuana outdoors in a public area, allowing people to smoke in public places like parks, walking trails, bus stops and businesses. HB 1697, which will take effect September 1, makes both smoking marijuana and smoking tobacco in public places illegal.The Legal and Policy Implications of Organ Transplantation: a Qualitative Study. To discuss the benefits and challenges of organ transplantation, transplantation law, and living donor transplantation for surgical patients with kidney cancer. A qualitative study using grounded theory. Participants were selected purposively and included 34 participants from various transplantation organizations, hospital and university officials, and physicians and nurses. Interviews and focus groups were digitally recorded and transcribed. Colaizzi's 7-step framework was used to guide analysis. The leading benefit of transplantation was its potential to cure renal cancer. The leading challenge of transplantation was informed consent for living donation. Participants reported that transplantation law was confusing and generally followed a common law approach, although some aspects of the law could be reduced for living donors and transplantation. The participants cited issues with shortages and mismatched organs, which were aggravated by legislation that restricted transplantation under certain conditions. Transplantation law was generally described as favorable for transplanting kidneys because of the stated health benefits and because it is driven by market forces. However, participants described transplantation as an unpopular option for renal cancer treatment. Transplantation law could be improved, although laws exist and are being amended to allow living kidney donation. Strategies to increase public acceptance and legal protection of transplantation are needed, and regional collaboration is essential for future research and innovation.. Limited funds and a long delay in receiving material from outside publishers were also serious limitations. Yet even with these limitations, EUREKA has made a large contribution to science in the past few years. --- Laboratory of Medical Microbiology, Research Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique, at the University of Bordeaux Site Agate, B-33
