This article outlines the basic skills required in order to use Photoshop. See also: Use Photoshop Like an Expert Understanding Photoshop Layers Before getting started, it is important to understand the role layers play in the way

Photoshop works. In Photoshop, layers are like sheets of glass on which your images live. They act as a type of container for your projects. You can move, resize, and copy images that are on a layer without altering the layer itself. Like layers, files can be saved in other formats, such as Adobe's Portable Document Format (PDF) or the Graphics Interchange Format (GIF).

Typically, you'll want to save your projects in high-resolution, high-quality formats like JPEG, TIFF, or PNG. In the Photoshop workspace, your images are saved in the Toolbox, the Layers panel, and the Channels panel. You can access all of these locations via the Window menu. The Toolbox window is where you will find your images. You can add more images by dragging files from the computer, either from your hard drive or a file folder on your computer's desktop. Click and drag to select more than one file, and Shift + click to select multiple layers. Use the Window menu to switch between open images and the Layers panel. Your images are stored in the Layers panel. You can draw on your photos with the Brush or create new layers by selecting the

Layers panel header. Images placed on layers can be moved, resized, rotated, and turned into grayscale images. Use the Channels palette to change image format to RGB or CMYK. The Channels palette, found in the bottom left corner of the screen, shows you the changes that take place when you manipulate images, such as rotating or resizing a layer. You can switch between RGB and CMYK modes in the palette. You can also change the opacity of an image layer or move it by dragging it on the workspace. You can use the Brush to paint on images. From the main menu, choose Select > Edit, or click the Brush icon in the Tools panel. You can also change the Brush settings by clicking the Brush Settings button on the right side of the Brush icon, located under the Brush category in the Tools panel. The Brush Settings menu includes settings such as Size, Hardness, Size of Stroke, and Paint. You can also use the Republican senator James Inhofe is accusing global warming activists of acting like 'an angry mob' The United States is entering a new era of fecklessness, a world leader who doesn't pay its way and an overreaching bureaucracy that, in the words of one bumbling official, has been "disingenuous in the extreme." That's Sen. Jim

Inhofe, the Republican chairman of the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee, who uttered the word "extremism" more than 50 times in a speech this morning to a group of Americans for Prosperity, an organization that backed Mitt Romney in the presidential election. "It's time for a new direction," Inhofe said at a breakfast meeting of the conservative group, drawing laughs when he warned about "the dangers of being the world's policeman." He also denied that Republicans are the party of anti-climate change sentiment and appeared to suggest that environmentalists are just "angry mobs." Inhofe, who was featured on a 60 Minutes segment in 2008 that made him a household name and made him an ally of fossil fuel companies, appeared determined to spin his record as a climate skeptic. "When I talk about an angry mob or the threat of runaway government, I'm not talking about John Q. Public," he said. "I'm talking about the small percentage of Americans who want to attack businesses on behalf of the green movement or the communists or anybody else who disagrees with them."

"We're not going to repeal the EPA," Inhofe continued. "We'll simply put the EPA back into its box and allow it to work for the American people, not for a narrow political agenda."

Inhofe's comments came in response to an email chain in which AFP National Field Director Rob Cornuelle wrote to the senator, warning him that he was showing "a willingness to associate with the fringe elements and extremists of the far right." "Senator, I'd be happy to share my thoughts on why this is a big mistake. But you put so much in to them that you want to be fair," Cornuelle wrote. "Don't. The fringe elements and extremists on the right are already out there. That is why we are here." The senator's comments were part of a broader theme in the speech. "Congress has betrayed the American people by continuing to raise government regulation and taxes to the point that the cost of energy is beginning to rival the

Q: Can't add class to a div which has another div inside (Ionic) I have a section in my ionic app with a div tag and inside one more div. But when I add the class to the first it won't work. If I add the same tag but without a div it works fine and I can add the class and it changes the background. Title Lorem ipsum dolor sit amet, consectetur adipiscing elit, sed do eiusmod tempor incididunt ut labore et dolore magna aliqua. On the second the div is empty. A: That is not how the DOM works. There can only be one element with the same tag name per document. If you have two elements like in your example, the browser needs to remove the tags from the first one and insert the of the second one. I suggest to wrap the content of the first section in a , the parent element of the second section as well. So it will look like this: Title Lorem ipsum dolor sit amet, consectetur adipisicing elit, sed do eiusmod tempor incididunt ut labore et dolore magna aliqua.
