! TABLET COMPATIBILITY Photoshop runs reasonably well on tablets, but if you are serious about using a tablet, you'll want Photoshop Elements. Elements gives you all the same basic functions of Photoshop, and it has many of the basic features that make it a powerhouse tool for touchscreens. You can set up a Photoshop text layer in about four clicks, and after you have your text the way you want it, you can save it to the cloud or export to a myriad of devices (see the sidebar "Tablet-friendly Photoshop programs," earlier in this chapter). You can import images from an iPad or other tablet. If you are a beginner, I recommend going through the one- or two-hour-long YouTube tutorials. | --- | --- | ---

Live above two different worlds, above the ground and the belly of the earth, a poet without love or shelter, in a town without light, or memory, or day. Worth Five Dollars A Word The first time I wrote a poem I was fourteen years old. I would sit late at night in my room, with my dog and typewriter, typing by starlight. I put my words on a page that folded out of the typewriter, and then threw it onto the floor. It lay there but I couldn't see it. My pager and headphones were making noise. I could hear a train and looked out the window but it was night. My father sat across the hall drinking. I was terrified to write any word, this was for myself, alone. So I read an old poetry book, Aiken's Book of Sonnets, that my grandmother left me. I read: "I begin by being beautiful. My beauty draws the birds and then I can eat them." I was happy to find a book I loved and that I understood. It was a way to think about love and beauty and the world. I read the sonnets and then I wrote my first word. Just that one word was worth five dollars, when a book cost ten. What kind of a life could I have had if I spent all my years writing trying to sing beautiful words, that no one would ever listen to. Instead I would paint myself a picture that was worth five dollars. You sit there, you know you are weak. You have a tail, and not a face, and you do everything. You watch the moon and the stars. You understand that where you come from is where your life began. I fell in love with a girl from an island far away. She told me that the earth was curved. She was right, but it did me no good. The edges of the earth had no shape. I stood in the center and couldn't believe that the other world could come to me. But I knew it could, it could and I believed, and so I jumped into the night and the night grabbed me and threw me, and I came to rest on a beach not unlike the one where you live. And when I would fall asleep I would see a luminous light, rising
