My objective is to use GEE to create a map of Type 3 levels or more at each location. example: for locations in first group (group1): Type 1, 2, or 3, have the value for locations in second group (group2): Type 1, 2, 3, or more have the value What I want is all of this: each type of A location, and also any location that has that type of A, but location has no requirement on the type of B. I tried na.locf, and nothing seems to work. A: If you are trying to create a count of the number of groups per location for each location type combination and ignore the location type of the second group, you can use a combination of summarize_all and nest in gee() to calculate the count. The example that follows creates counts of the number of groups and group types per location and then combines that to a list so that you can create the map. library(ggplot2) library(geepack) demo1
