Summary:The big drama is whether the U.S. will invoke a never-before-used emergency provision of the U.N. Charter to force Israel to withdraw from the West Bank, or whether it will seek to impose additional punishment on the Palestinians. This week, the de facto ruler of the Palestinian Authority, Mahmoud Abbas, told the United Nations General Assembly, "We will not accept a peace plan that is not accompanied by an end to the occupation of the Palestinian lands." Abba is referring to the international peace plan proposed by U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry. Abbas even issued an ultimatum: He said the Palestinians must officially declare their acceptance of the U.S.-sponsored plan by September 28, or the United States will impose even more punitive measures against them. The stakes in the showdown between the Trump administration and the Palestinian Authority are high. The United States needs the Palestinians to agree to the peace plan in order to keep the current U.S. administration in place. Abbas' remarks are an attempt to revive the stalled peace talks with Israel, and he is offering the Palestinians a way out of the impasse that has paralyzed the negotiation. While the Palestinians have consistently rejected the U.S. peace initiative out of hand, Abbas is hoping to be able to save face by demanding that the United States consider levying additional punishments. This week, the Palestinians made it clear that they think the U.S. peace initiative is fatally flawed in its implementation of Israel's right to retain control of East Jerusalem and the rest of the West Bank, and of Israel's right to colonize and annex parts of the West Bank - much of which is controlled by Israeli settlers. They've also announced their intention to rescind the Oslo accords (the armistice agreement that established the Palestinian "waqf" from the fighting that broke out in 1993) because those accords are formally illegal, since they were imposed on the Palestinians without their consent.
