I am trying to make my class as secure as I can, which I suspect might be a problem. In addition to the standard RandomSecurityManager classes, I have a private RandomClass that extends SecureRandom and then is located in the package.classes. I would like it to be as secure as possible. I'm not really sure what I can do to make sure someone can't do anything. I thought the class Location would give an example of a possible security vulnerability. I'm worried that even if I get the class moved, a malicious user can use Reflect to read the class and get a pointer to the Location
