reviews, music, news, and more. Corinthians Mitt Romney was a Mormon when he ran for president, and had a more than a few things he wanted to say about gay sex and the Mormon religion. The Mormon church had a lot to say about the topic too. When word got out that he had been divorced and remarried, he never denied the fact. But he most certainly disagreed with some of the things they had to say. His take on the church was predictable, saying they "let down the family." The key issue came up during the primaries when Mitt Romney was asked if the federal government should continue to fund Gay-Straight Alliance clubs at schools. Mr. Romney was clear that he believed in the concept of equality for everyone, and that the government should not fund bigotry. The problem is that the Liberals who control the Democrat party, while acknowledging the issue of equality, believe that the federal government should spend money to fund homosexuality and the GSA. It may be easy for Mr. Romney to be non-judgmental of other people 1cdb36666d
