Thrombotic thrombocytopenic purpura associated with hepatic-portal venous gas. Thrombotic thrombocytopenic purpura (TTP) is a rare microangiopathic syndrome marked by severe thrombocytopenia and hemolytic anemia. Its pathogenesis is still incompletely understood, but in many cases, it has been associated with a preceding infection. In the present report, TTP was observed in a 49-year-old man in association with the presence of hepatic-portal venous gas (HPVG) in the subhepatic region, which was proved by computed tomography (CT). The patient's symptoms and thrombocytopenia were resolved by antibiotic treatment. Fifteen cases of TTP associated with HPVG have been reported in the literature, in most of which the thrombocytopenia and HPVG were not described. The present report suggests that the presence of HPVG in a patient with thrombocytopenia may be a clue to the diagnosis of TTP.
