Every time you turn on a set-top box (TV, cable box, game console, etc), you are telling the unit to spin up and ask you, "Hey, are you bored? Do you want some free programming?" And then the user/viewer is faced with a deciding factor: entertainment and information or entertainment and instruction? Notice that the latest set-top boxes (like Netflix and TiVo) are starting to permit these questions and that there are powerful new apps for smartphones, tablets and computers. As the media ecosystem evolves, different selection mechanisms will exist, and the media companies - both those making programming and those delivering programming - will always have an opportunity to adapt to it. Mobile Technology 1 and Mobile Technology 2 are all examples of the evolution of the media eco-systems, where media developers and distributors have adopted new approaches that may ultimately force viewing preferences to evolve in unexpected directions. Google for Education Certified Trainers are passionate and driven education professionals with a desire to help others transform classrooms with technology.
