Seriously, Why do you need to unlock a phone? I mean, if you payed for it, chances are the sell will release you from the activation lock. But, if its a knockoff then you can still have a legitimate reason. Even if the phone wont work on a new network, there isnt a reason it cant work on an old one. The type of iPhone do not matter, theres dozens of options, black and white, iphone 6 and iphone 6 plus etc. It isnt necessary to unlock an iPhone if you have not paid for an iCloud account on that iPhone and have no need to activate it. Activation is required when you have a paid iCloud account and need to activate the phone on that account. First off, apple shipped the initial activation codes with the phone. It requires the initial activation code to prevent the phone from being activated again and the phone from being reprogrammed. When the subscriber receives an activation e-mail message, the activation code is shown in the e-mail body, and the name and the activation code are pre-written in the e-mail message. The activation code is generated by the 4MeKey utility, and the subscriber is asked to enter the code. If the activation code does not match, the mobile phone owner should request for re-activation. (Re-activation will be performed via telephone or other methods.) After the mobile phone is activated, a message will be sent to the mobile phone owner to inform him that the mobile phone has been successfully activated, and the activation code can be used to unlock the mobile phone. To activate the mobile phone, the activation code should be entered after connecting the mobile phone to the computer via a USB cable. 5ec8ef588b
