So now lets talk about the HRM (heart rate monitor) GPS Accuracy is off by 50ft or more. GPS is more accurate than you can ever need. The HRM is much less accurate and you had to pay extra for it. I also have been testing this HRM over a 50km run. I timed that with my iphone. I kept my HR on the iPhone for the whole test. I think my iPhone is more accurate than the Garmin HRM. By a whole range. There are a lot of problems with these watches. They are nowhere near as accurate or useful as they want you to believe. I bought the Fenix 5 for $400, a 5 dollars more than this unit for only 10% more accuracy. Garmin made the watch buggy and useless and then gave up on it. So they made a new HRM that is more buggy than the old one and then charged you for it. I would recommend not buying any new Garmin products if you want something that can keep you alive. I do not recommend buying anything from Garmin. They have completely lost their way. Do not waste your money on these devices. I wouldnt buy them myself if they gave them away. Then what would be the use if you are going to lose half your data when you go to see the doctor and want to bring the watch. I have been through two replacement watches. In the last 2 months both of my watches have been in the Amazon store to be fixed. No one at Garmin is capable of repairing the software. You have to ask a third party. They will tell you to "call customer service" and its done. I can tell you that both times the customer service people were clueless. They wouldnt do anything at all. I wonder if thats some kind of robot that we have to pay to fix our watches? Oh I dont know.. I have this watch now to keep track of my f*cking sleep. So I will have one until it dies..And i wont buy another one.

In my case, it seems I shouldn't even bother. Problem seems to be a known issue and according to Garmin support, they know about it and are working on fixing it. No response to my email to them was given. This is a great article. Very well researched and very easy to understand. I try to keep it as simple as possible, however we are all human. The one place Garmin excelled for me was in the GPS accuracy (and software). Unfortunately after version 6 GPS accuracy on my Fenix 5 is atrocious and I am having a difficult time with this unit. If the advice here doesn't work, I am considering doing some crazy analog backup with a Polar H7 and a base or two for training. GPS should be fine at home. Even in city and roads for me, however outside GPS accuracy is a huge problem. The readings are very important and that is where Garmin excels over the competition. However the lack of one or more of the other standard stats, namely pace (only marginally true on no-data, but still enough) and distance have me convinced that without watch stress meters, I am over paying for Garmin that they aren't providing. Once you have a car the next thing is to unlock your doors and windows, this is not done by just pushing a button, but by connecting the unit to your car and the instructions on where to put your remote are generally pretty easy to follow. Garmin have a good video that shows you how to do this with their GPS Plus and this can of course be done with their higher priced units as well. If you have a Garmin GPS it could be that it is not the unit that is locking, but it could be that it is your Garmin account that is locked. Have you downloaded the latest map image to your Garmin. Maybe its time to think about a new toy. All Garmin accessories are compatible with the Fenix3 line of watches. In the top left corner of each image, there should be a lock. If a lock is not present, it may indicate you have not unlocked all the fields. This may indicate that the device is locking a different thing than the one listed on the other side. 5ec8ef588b
