Description: During this module you will get a real taste for life on the rails by following in the footsteps of railway engineers, maintenance staff, signalmen and conductors during a visit to the London Transport Museum's Depot & Branch Train Operation Centre (TOC). This is an important part of the Royal Society of London's LabEx project, and will include visits to the boiler room, the steam engine shed, signalbox, storerooms, engine mess, the cab end, and the driver cab. You'll also be able to ride in a steam engine, and may even be allowed to drive one! Throughout the period of the course you will get first-hand insight into the history of the railway in the capital, and learn how a modern complex transport network with over 40,000 employees operates 24/7. Also, if you are brave enough, you may even get a taste of life working on one of the 'hot' trains, or even a ride on one. As you will be earning credits towards the MSc Urban Knowledge Management by working within the historic, transport collection at the LTM we'll recommend that you do not take this as part of the MA, but instead of continuing with this course as a postgraduate. Description: This module provides students with introductory training in theoretical and practical elements of experimental linguistics. The module will include hands-on training in statistics and hypothesis testing, experimental design, data collection (including training in ethical human subjects research protocols), and data analysis. The module will also engage students in considering strengths and limitations of various kinds of linguistics data, and how multiple sources of data and methods of data collection can be combined to enhance understanding. Students will develop their critical reading skills and gain practice in presenting primary source literature to their peers. 5ec8ef588b
